

wine list

Wine was already being grown in Austria around 3,000 years ago, during the time of the Celts. The oldest wine-growing regions in Austria are the Burgenland municipality of Zagersdorf and the Lower Austrian municipality of Stillfried in the Weinviertel.

Wine from Austria is currently considered one of the most interesting phenomena in the wine world. It is valued by wine connoisseurs and praised by journalists - and it is not uncommon to speak of an Austrian wine miracle. From the Wachau in the west to Vienna, Grüner Veltliner and Rieslings dominate in great density.

Austria is characterized by a continental-Pannonian climate with cold winters and hot, dry summers with a long vegetation cycle. Sunny summer days with often cool nights and mild autumn days are typical for most wine-growing regions. Annual precipitation averages 400 mm in the east and up to 800 mm in Styria. The Danube and its tributaries Krems and Kamp as well as Lake Neusiedl in Burgenland have a positive influence. In late autumn, grapes of the Beerenauslese and Trockenbeerenauslese (or Ausbruch) quality categories often ripen on the banks. The often very low temperatures from December to January also make it possible to produce a considerable amount of ice wine in the east.
